There are also excellent transport links, including regular bus routes into Newcastle and easy access via the A1(M).

External features include front, rear, and side gardens (which was bought from the council by the current owner), a brick-built outhouse, and ample non-allocated parking.

Perkinsville is a small village located in County Durham, North East England. It is situated immediately to the north of Pelton and to the north-west of Chester-le-Street. The village was constructed between 1858 and 1871 by Edward Moseley Perkins, who ran Birtley Iron Works and two local coal mines. The village was originally laid out in a simple colliery housing style with streets named "A street" through "E Street" and a North Street, but in the 20th century there was considerable redevelopment of the village. Today, Perkinsville has a few shops including a convenience store, a fish and chip shop, and a beauty salon.
