Glyn Lledr Farm is an attractive and substantial traditional former smallholding occupying a wonderfully secluded position amidst the dramatic scenery of the Lledr Valley. The property lies close to Pont Gethin and the River Lledr, yet is conveniently situated approximately 3 miles from the popular village of Betws-y-Coed. The property is centred around an impressive farmhouse, displaying considerable character and retaining many traditional architectural features associated with a property of its age. The accommodation is substantial and offers considerable potential to create a particularly appealing country residence.

An important feature of the property is the additional detached cottage, providing useful supplementary accommodation with potential for extended family, guest or holiday accommodation, subject to any necessary consents.

The farmhouse is complemented by an attractive range of traditional stone-built outbuildings, which add considerably to the character and versatility of the holding. These buildings offer scope for a variety of ancillary uses and may provide potential for alternative uses or conversion, subject to the necessary planning and listed building consents.

The property stands within approximately 18.31 acres, comprising gardens and grounds together with areas of pasture and woodland. The land and buildings combine to provide considerable privacy and create an exceptionally attractive rural environment.

Location

The setting is undoubtedly one of the principal features of Glyn Lledr Farm.
