Redditch is a town in north-east Worcestershire, located about 15 miles south of Birmingham.

Originally a small medieval settlement, it grew rapidly during the 19th century as a global centre for needle and fishing tackle manufacturing — earning it the nickname “the Needle Capital of the World.” In the 1960s, Redditch was designated a “New Town,” leading to significant redevelopment and modernisation, with carefully planned residential areas, green spaces, and an innovative ring-road system designed to keep traffic flowing efficiently.

Today, Redditch blends its industrial heritage with contemporary living, offering shopping centres like the Kingfisher, scenic parks such as Arrow Valley Country Park, and good transport links to the wider West Midlands.
