Redditch became a prominent Town with north east Worcestershire as a major centre for the manufacture of needles and fishing tackle and there are many of the original red brick factories still evident today.

More latterly, the Redditch has evolved as a well planned Town with much development over the last 30 years including an excellent road system and extensive social, retail and sporting amenities. The Town is situated around 15 miles south of Birmingham to which there are regular rail services making this an excellent place from which to commute.

Access to the Midland motorway network s exceptional with the M40, M42 & M5 all being with a short drive.
